Research Assistant I (Ref: 2601010)
Department of Psychology

Project Title: Using multi-session brain stimulation to reduce loneliness and depression
[Appointment Period: 7 months]

The appointee will work on projects that utilise brain stimulation to reduce loneliness and depression. They will support the research team in planning and conducting the project activities. The appointee will conduct literature review and prepare assessment materials. They will help with the recruitment of participants, collection of behavioural and neuroimaging (e.g. MRI) data, as well as administering multi-session brain stimulation (e.g. tDCS). They will also help with data management and data analysis. The appointee will assist in manuscript writing and any other duties as assigned. They may have to travel to other institutions.

Applicants should have a Bachelor's Degree in Psychology, Cognitive neuroscience, or a related discipline, with some research experience. They should have a good command of Cantonese as well as a good command of written Chinese and English. Applicants should also have good interpersonal skills and organisational skills. Having research experience in neuroimaging and brain stimulation will be a definite advantage.
