Summary Report of Knowledge Gained from the Collection, Analysis, and Synthesis of Graduate Thesis Work in Thai Universities Pongsin Viseshsiri

Research to synthesize the trend and direction of education in instructional leadership is a useful academic work. Each year, there is a large amount of research in the areas of educational leadership, most of which are research at the graduate level from universities across the country. If there is a study that survey and synthesis of these researches that took place over the past five years, which is a time of educational change to support Thailand 4.0 policy, it will yield a concrete knowledge. The result of this study can become a guideline for the development of educational leaders and further research in this field. This study, therefore, explores graduate research from universities in Thailand using various sources of information from the university's thesis database across the country and from other public and private sources which makes the number of research matches the most realistic in order to be used in analyzing and summarizing accurately.
