Educational Leadership Through and Beyond the Pandemic

David GURR
University of Melbourne

Based upon 59 papers from four pandemic special issues of International Studies in Educational Administration, the impact of, and responses to, the pandemic on schools are described and implications for education and educational leadership considered. Whilst the pandemic is an ongoing major disruption to education across the world, and many are predicting revolutionary change, the presentation argues that changes to education and educational leadership will be more evolutionary than revolutionary. Considering best and next practices ideas, a 20-year prediction of key features of education and educational leadership is provided.
