Clive Dimmock is Professor of Educational Leadership and Professional Learning at the University of Glasgow. His interests currently focus on educational policy reform in the Asian region and the response at school level to the challenges of policy implementation. Theoretically, he is an advocate of conceptualising schools and education systems as complex adaptive systems. He has enduring commitment – with Allan Walker - to cross-cultural educational leadership and schooling (especially between Asia and Anglo-American systems). His other writings include transforming schools into innovative learning environments, research-informed practice in schools, and R-D-D methodology aimed at research-into-practice.
