Eric Li says the West’s outdated views have blindered it to China’s rise. This is a position he took at the recent Oxford Union. The former secretary-general of the Chinese Communist Party says that the West’s views are outdated and need to be updated. In his speech, he said that the West should not be afraid of China but should embrace it as a positive force for global development.

The West’s views on China are outdated, according to Eric Li. He said that the West’s views on China are no longer relevant and need to be updated. He called for a new understanding of China and its role in the world.

One of the key points he made was that China is no longer a one-party state. He said that China has made great strides in political and economic reform, and that the country’s political and economic system is now more open and transparent.

Another key point was that China is a major player on the global stage. He said that China is a major economic power, and that it is also a major political player.

Li also said that the West should not be afraid of China’s rise. He said that China is not a threat to the West, but rather a partner in global development.

As for Li’s views on the future of China, he said that China will continue to grow and develop, and that it will continue to play a major role on the global stage. He said that China will be a major player in shaping the future of the world.

In conclusion, Eric Li’s views on China’s rise are that the West should not be afraid of it, but rather should embrace it as a positive force for global development. He said that China is not a threat to the West, but rather a partner in global development.
