1. Course Synopsis

This course explores literature written and published in English in the twenty-first century, including fiction, poetry, and works in emerging genres. The themes and meanings of literary texts are analyzed, discussed, and critiqued as in other literary studies courses, but this course also familiarizes and trains students in the processes of literary judgment that obtain in discussion of recently published works. In other words, students will participate, through discussion, debate, and book reviewing, in the shaping of contemporary literary taste. They will also explore the world marketplace for literature in English, including the basic elements of contemporary literary culture, like journals, festivals, prizes, and the publishing market. Despite the rivalry of other media and media technologies, works of literature remain central both to contemporary global culture and to the local community. This course invites students to participate in that culture and that community in an active, motivated way.
