Assistant Professor

Presentation Topic:

Which types of family caregivers are more prone to developing depression? A three-level approach to building family resilience and reducing caregiver depression (Supported by Dean's Research Fund, FLASS)

Abstract:

This study investigates the effect of our proposed three-level intervention on building family resilience and reducing caregiver depression. The three-level intervention included (1) individual-, (2) family-, and (3) community-level support. We recruit family caregivers into our intervention study and ask them to complete the Beck Depression Inventory-II, Family Resilience Assessment Scale, and a demographic characteristics questionnaire before and after the intervention. We expect that the intervention has a positive effect on enhancing family resilience and reducing caregiver depression.

Presentation Topic:

Making children's perspectives count: A critical reflection on researching Chinese adopted children (supported by Emerging Impact Case Fund, SSC)

Abstract:

The Lifeworld of Adopted Children, https://issuu.com/adoption_picturebook, is the first bi-lingual picture book utilising interview transcripts with 13 Chinese adopted children. In this presentation, I will critically reflect on the research journey, focusing on challenges in designing, conducting, and presenting a qualitative research project on Chinese adopted children in Hong Kong. Specially I will share why and how the study has departed from the tradition of adoption studies, some ethical dilemmas and methodological challenges when accessing and interviewing young Chinese adoptees, and the complexity of translating and representing children's narratives in the local context.
