1. Course Synopsis

The transition from childhood to adolescence represents one of life's most profound developmental shifts, characterized by significant physiological, cognitive, social, and psychological changes.

This course begins by exploring childhood as a foundational developmental stage where early roles, selves, and identities are formed and shaped. It then delves into the transition to adolescence, a phase where individuals take on new roles and develop evolving selves and identities, while understanding the risks and challenges faced during this transition is essential, as it involves the interplay of various carers and stakeholders such as family members, peers, mentors, teachers, and social workers. The course also highlights the importance of identifying psychosocial resources and protective factors that can empower and support children and adolescents in successfully navigating this transitional and challenging period in wider community contexts.

2. Course Intended Learning Outcomes (CILOs)

Upon completion of this course, students will be able to:

CILO1: Understand the developmental transitions from childhood to adolescence.

CILO2: Explore theories of identity development in childhood and adolescence.

CILO3: Address contextual constraints, risks, and challenges in child and adolescent development.

CILO4: Apply psychosocial resources and protective factors to support growth and transitions.
